

Fred's (Peterson) Vintaged View

In 1983, when we began planting the Bradford Mountain Vineyard, we sourced Merlot and Cabernet Franc budwood from Newton Vineyard in the Napa Valley. My friend John Kongsgaard was winemaker/manager of Newton Vineyards at the time. He had made available to us their heritage Cabernet Franc and Merlot selections planted by Ric Foreman, a founder and the original winemaker at Newton Vineyards.

When I arrived to make the cuttings, John mentioned that we might want to make some cuttings from his Petit Verdot block. John's take on Petit Verdot was that it was an odd variety to grow, an interesting wine to make and always a great addition to their Bordeaux blends. We cut enough budwood to graft half of an acre onto rootstocks we had planted in the spring.

After planting this small block, I learned that this selection could be traced back to the Jackson Field Station in the Sierra Nevada foothills. This demonstration vineyard was planted in the 1880's by Henry Hilgaard, the founding professor of the University of California's Viticulture and Enology Department.

While always an important part of some of our great Cabernet Sauvignon and Agraria blends, we never thought it would stand alone as a varietal bottling until the 2010 vintage, when Jamie put together a blend that showcases the sauvage qualities of Petit Verdot, as well as the Bradford Mountain terroir.

The 2013 vintage was once again a perfect growing season to fully ripen Petit Verdot, providing all the classic characteristics of this grape. It deserves to be appreciated as a single varietal.

Tasting Notes

Deep aromatics of wild-grown ripe blackberry are fused with an inviting mineral essence and traces of forest floor. Buoyant acidity delivers robust flavors of brambly berry, spicy cedar and minerality. Rich mocha and oak notes appear mid-palate, integrating as the wine expands across the lengthy finish. Delicious now, this wine will develop further elegance and grace with additional bottle aging.

Ideal to pair with prosciutto-wrapped beef tenderloin, pasta carbonara, or cheese and sausage stuffed portobello mushrooms.
